

Oncology Nursing Certification is Good for Business

Invest in your nursing staff by supporting certification.

58%

of respondents said their employer financially supports certification preparation and pays test fees.

Concerned about the bottom line? Supporting certification of your oncology nurses could be a smart business strategy, one that many employers have already discovered.

According to the ONCC Value of Certification study completed in 2023, 58% of respondents said their employer financially supports certification preparation and pays test fees.

The Value of Certification Study also showed:

- 94% of respondents said oncology nursing certification indicates a nurse's strong commitment to the profession. That commitment could help reduce turnover and the related costs of recruiting and onboarding new staff.
- 75% of respondents said oncology nursing certification increases patient/consumer confidence. That confidence could provide you with an edge when consumers are choosing where to get their care.
- 72% of respondents said oncology nursing certification increases effective job performance. Effective nursing staff are better prepared to meet patient care challenges.

Discover more in the ONCC Value of Certification Study Report.

Learn more about certification in oncology nursing at oncc.org.